This invention relates to a plate-like article coated with a continuous film of a softenable binder. It is well known in the art to coat plate-like articles with a film of a binder which is softenable and the film is made to adhere to the plate-like article. The binder may be, for example, a tacky resin which is softened by the application of heat or light, and the resulting film then serves as an adhesive. In order to use the resin coated articles which are provided with the softenable film as an adhesive, the softenable film is first softened and then adhered to an adherend, for example, a vinyl bag or a package. However, where the adhesive coated article is to be adhered to a thin and fragile article, such as, for example, a membrane or a thin paper, it
