Beginning on January 12, 2019, Capcom released the first patch to the Resident Evil 4 remaster, adding support for the game to Windows 10 and offering the possibility of using the original install file. An extremely rare albino Bengal tiger that lived in the wild for more than a decade has been captured on camera for the first time. The tiger, believed to be the only one of its kind in the world, was photographed in Afghanistan by zoologist Martin Walls and international charity Panthera. The extraordinary animal, named Bandar, had been on the run for many years after escaping from a breeding centre and was presumed dead. But in 2017, it was found living in a remote part of the country, moving between the snowy mountains and valleys of Helmand province. It was given the name Bandar after the city in Afghanistan where it was discovered. The tiger was photographed by Martin Walls (pictured), a zoologist who has worked with the charity Panthera to capture rare images of albino tigers across the world. The animal

He was captured in 2017 and given the name Bandar 'I was travelling with Panthera through the country in 2017 when we came across an albino tiger,' said Walls. 'It was the only albino tiger I'd seen in my entire life, and to this day, I'm convinced that there are no other albino tigers in the world. 'It was a thrill to be able to witness this beautiful animal up close and to learn about its life and see that it was living in relatively good condition. 'We had heard of the Bandar family – a single family living in the mountains of Helmand – for years, and we had to see this tiger first hand to validate their claims. 'We were concerned that Bandar might be fearful or aggressive, but as soon as I walked closer I saw that he was just a curious little fellow. He was very friendly. 'We were able to observe Bandar for several hours, seeing a variety of behaviours that are
